

The Greenscaled Redfang: my imaginary dragon

By
Oscar Toomey

My imaginary dragon species is called Greenscaled Redfang. It lives in deep valleys so it can camouflage with its grass-green scales. It feasts upon other Redfangs, smaller dragons and wyverns who step talon on its land. It has grass-green scales with a light black stripe trickling down its side. It has a black pupil and a dark green iris. It has a long neck with spikes of bone on the left and right of it. It cannot breathe fire but uses its talons and fangs for hunting and spits acid using a poison bulb where a fire-breathing dragons spark pouch would be. It is very territorial and will attempt, and mostly succeed, to kill dragons or wyverns in its land. It has wings as wide as its tail is long and they are coated with armour-like scales. Its tail ends with sharp, thick spikes that it will impale all who threaten it or could be food.

WARNING: VERY HOSTILE, DO NOT APPROACH EVEN WITH OR AS A TRAINED
PROFFESIONAL!